As for the popular vote, it is most likely Trump will again lose in 2020. As he did in 2016, however, and considering who the frontrunners are, swing state voters will not vote for a Bernie Sanders, Elizabeth Warren, or Pete Buttigieg.

Should Joe Biden win the Democratic nomination, the flip side of the current impeachment drama will cast a seriously negative shadow on him as details emerge of how his son Hunter made millions of dollars in inside deals via daddy's connections as U.S. Vice President.

Thus, Trump will win in 2020 by default: the fault of the Democratic Party, whose candidates lack the mass appeal platform and personality needed to beat the Reality Show Champion Donald Trump.

2020 NEW WORLD DISORDER

It's Crashing.

Few recognize it. Most are tuned out. They don't have a clue.

Politicians across the globe are fighting for survival against angry mobs who want to overthrow them.

Citizens across the globe are fighting for freedom and survival.

Fighting for freedom.

Fighting against government control, corruption, income inequality, poverty, violence, crime...

From South America to Africa, from the Middle East to Asia to Europe, millions are taking to the streets across the globe in numbers never seen before.

Too busy, tech-addicted, too many problems of their own... whatever it is.

From the average Joe and Jane to the top of the income chain, most don't have a clue of what's going on, what it means, or where it's going.

Because if they did, steps would be taken now to reverse the pain and destruction that will follow.

Not News

The mainstream media barely reports it. And when they do, it's sold with political/government/corporate bias.

Stuck in the past and blind to the future, dumbed down on a junk-news diet of brainwashed views, sound bites, and propaganda... the public swallows what's fed to them.

The world is not prepared for the "2020 New World Disorder."

OFF WITH THEIR HEADS 2.0

Income inequality!

From the United States' Presidential Reality Show®, where the leading Democratic candidates are pushing for higher taxes on the wealthiest and bashing billionaires, to Lebanon, Algeria, and the many other countries written about in the Trends Journal where people have lost everything and have nothing left to lose – the bottom line of most of the protests is gross income inequality.

The anger and rage directed at the 1 percent, plus the multinational monopolies that political establishments support, will accelerate in 2020, as world economies slow down while the richest stay richest and the vast majorities get poorer.

In the U.S., for example, there are fears and growing concerns among the billionaire financial class of the public dissent and what to do about it... while most in politics and the mainstream media condemn those who want to raise their taxes and spread the wealth.

In fact, Michael Bloomberg, worth some $56 billion, threw his top hat into The Presidential Reality Show® in an effort to knock out the "spread the wealth, tax the rich" Democrats Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders leading the polls.

On the media front, several billionaires have been hitting the airwaves exalting how much they give and all they do to help elevate a socially and economically declining society. What these "philanthropists" say they give, and how they really help, however, is not being felt and/or accepted on Main Street.

Unless positive action is quickly taken by the 1 percent and others of high economic means to help the less fortunate masses, more bodyguards and safe-haven escape plans for the 1 percent will be needed as the "Off With Their Heads 2.0" trend comes to life.
